Approved For Release 2008/09/15 : CIA-RDP04M01816R000502000001-3

appellees were not shown to have had notice of the injunction, "let alone proof beyond a reasonable doubt," and that the other three were "lured to [the] protected premises in what this court chooses to lade as 'invited contempt,' [thereby] negativ[ing] the necessary wilfullness to constitute a contempt." We reverse.

[1, 2] As a minor matter, our review of the record indicates direct proof of at least some notice to at least five of the petitioners. Of greater importance, it shows three sources from which it could be fairly inferred that all petitioners had notice: general group discussion prior to entry, at least one posted sign, and two loud speaker broadcasts, one prior to entry, and one after entry to the effect that the protestors could be purged of contempt if they left immediately, (met by a chorus of "no's"). While we may question the power of the police so to purge contempt, this issue does not arise. Certainly its questionable legal effectiveness does not negative the conclusion that the hearers who did not retreat were on notice thereafter.

We review a state court conviction in a hases proceeding only for constitutional aeror. If a direct constitutional right was involved, we may consider the state court's findings, including the adequacy of the evidence in support. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(8) (1976). See Townsend v. Sain, 1963, 372 U.S. 293, 316, 83 S.C. 145, 9 I.Ed.2d 770; Leavitt v. Howard, 1 Cir., 1972, 462 F.2d 929, 955–96, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 884, 93 S.C. 175, 34 I.Ed.2d 140. If, however, the cally claim of unconstitutionality is that the call of unconstitutionality is that the claim of unconstitutionality is that the claim of unconstitutiona

S.Ct. 624, 4 L.Ed.2d 654; Faust v. State of North Carolina, 4 Cir., 1962, 307 F.2d 869, 871-72, cert. denied, 371 U.S. 964, 83 S.Ct. 547, 9 L.Ed.2d 511. On the evidence, so viewed, we find ample basis from which to state court could infer, in spite of denials by some petitioners and invocation of distracting factors, that all petitioners, at some point or other, had notice of the injunction, and, accordingly, wilfully disregarded it.

[3] With respect to the issue of intent, we cannot accept the claim that the state court was obliged to find that petitioners were lured, or entrapped. It is true that the railroad tracks, which were not covered by the injunction, were blocked off, and that access to the enjoined premises was not blocked, but this was not an invitation to pass freely onto the premises. Petitioners' acknowledgement that they entered the premises with the intent to commit criminal trespass, and the expectation of being arrested therefor, itself admits that they did not believe that they were invited. Either they were invited, or they were not. When they knew they were not invited with respect to trespass, there is no basis for concluding that they were somehow "lured" with respect to the injunction.

There is, however, another matter. In its opinion granting the writ, the district court stated that "there is no need to reach the other serious constitutional deprivations claimed by petitioners." We have examined petitioners' other claims, and while we cannot agree with the breadth of this language, we do believe that petitioners have made a showing warranting review of the question whether, in light of the various statements made by the trial judge, they received a fair trial.

Reversed, and remanded for consideration of the issue of a fair trial.

Norman BIRNBAUM, B. Leonard Avery and Mary Rule MacMillen, Plaintiffs-Appellees, > UNITED STATES of America, Defendant-Appellant.

Nos. 935, 976, 977, Dockets 77–6175, 77–6181, 77–6183.

United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit.

> Argued May 3, 1978. Decided Nov. 9, 1978.

Suit was brought under Federal Tort Claims Act by individuals whose letters to and from the Soviet Union were opened and photocopied by Central Intelligence Agency. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, 436 F.Supp. 967, Jack B. Weinstein, J., entered judgment awarding damages and requiring Government apologies to each plaintiff, and United States appealed. The Court of Appeals, Gurfein, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) subject-matter jurisdiction existed under Federal Tort Claims Act for plaintiffs' suits, since claim for relief would lie under New York law against private person for intrusion upon privacy of another based upon opening and photocopying of sealed mail; (2) United States was not entitled to statutory exception from liability under Act; (3) evidence sustained finding of mental anguish under New York law sufficient to support judgment awarding $1,000 to each plaintiff as compensatory damages; (4) portion of judgment ordering that Government send letter of apology to each plaintiff would be reversed, since money damages was only form of relief provided in Act, and (5) denial of plaintiff's request for jury trial was not error.

Affirmed as modified.

Moore, Circuit Judge, concurred in part and dissented in part and filed opinion.

1. regeral Courts $374

Since claim for relief would lie under New York law against private person for intrusion upon privacy of another based upon opening and reading of sealed mail, subject-matter jurisdiction existed under Pederal Tort Claims Act for suit brought against United States by individuals whose letters to and from the Soviet Union were opened and photocopied by Central Intelligence Agency. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346(b), 2671–2680.

2. Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇔104, 109

Common-law copyright is, in essence, right of first publication, which of necessity includes right to suppress any publication by injunction; hence, although one may enjoin publication of letters to effectuate their suppression, damage remedy, defamation aside, would lie only if there were spoliation of right to first publication which actually destroyed value of owner's right to seek statutory copyright.

3. Federal Courts ⇔975

Tort of infringement of common-law copyright was not applicable to suit brought against United States under Federal Tort. Claims Act by individuals whose letters to and from the Soviet Union were opened and photocopied by Central Intelligence Agency, and subject-matter jurisdiction for suit could not be based upon that ground. 28 U.S.C.A. § 3146(b), 2671-2680.

4. United States $$\infty$78(14)

By adopting "law of the place" as source for rules of decision under Febreal Tort Claims Act, Congress expressly segated any possible inference that febral courts were to exercise any "commen law-making" power to fashion torts unider Act in interest of rational uniformity. 228 U.S. C.A. §S 1346(b), 2671–2880.

5. Federa! Courts €172

In suit brought against United States under Federal Tort Claims Act by nitisiduals whose letters to and from the Saviet Union were opened and photocopied by Central Intelligence Agency, subject-natter jurisdiction could not be based unon claim inited States = 78(5)

160 d States $ 78(5)

Iouit brought against United States of ederal Tort Claims Act by individual See letters to and from the Soviet of Edwere opened and photocopied by Intelligence Agency, United States ω scarriage, or negligent transmission entry or postal matter. 28 U.S.C.A. χΘ-2680, 2680(b). Edutory exception from waiver of im-iOrelating to any claim arising out of d it claim exception from liability un-

108:d States $\infty$78(12)
1\(\text{Oregards "discretionary function" exits of from waiver of immunity under a \text{O} \text{Tot} Claims Act, discretionary of \text{O} \text{can only be one within scope of} は立てy of agency or official, as delegated らいは、 regulation, or jurisdictional m上 28 U.S.C.A. 88 2671-2680, 2680(a). 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2671-2680, 2680(a).

Ji e 3 States = 78(12)
(c) tral Intelligence Agency, in opening ility under "discretionary function" exviduals whose letters were opened and ch could be called "discretionary," and ng so far beyond its authority that it tocopied, could not claim exception from inst it under Federal Tort Claims Act by efore United States, in suit brought Condendary private individuals' letnot have been exercising function and from the Soviet Union, was

> Security Act of 1947, § 102(d), (d)(3), (e), 50 U.S.C.A. § 403(d), (d)(3), (e)

Damages ≈ 130(1)

Union damages. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2671-2680. to each plaintiff of $1,000 in compensatory New York law sufficient to support award tained finding of mental anguish under Central Intelligence Agency, evidence susunder Federal Tort Claims Act by individuals whose letters to and from the Soviet In suit brought against United States were opened and photocopied by

11. United States == 144

in Act. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346(b), 2671-2680 damages" was only form of relief provided Central Intelligence Agency, portion of under Federal Tort Claims Act by individuplaintiff would be reversed, since "money Government send letter of apology to each Union were opened and photocopied by the als whose letters to and from the Soviet udgment ordering that United States In suit brought against United States

12. Federal Civil Procedure = 2081

der Federal Tort Claims Act was not "suit 2671-2680. request for jury trial was not error. U.S.C. Amendment, and thus denial of plaintiff's at common law" within meaning of Seventh A.Const. Amend. 7; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2402, Suit brought against United States un-

See publication Words and Phrases judicial constructions appellant. Brooklyn, N. Y., of counsel), for defendant-Washington, D. C. (Barbara Allen Babcock, David G. Trager, U. S. Atty., E. D. N. Y., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D. C., Asst. Atty. Gen., Leonard Schaitman, Atty., John M. Rogers, Atty., Dept. of Justice, bert Jordan, Bill of Rights Foundation, Kafor plaintiff-appellee Birnbaum. lett Walster, New York City, on the brief), binowitz, Boudin & Standard, and K. Rand-Michael Krinsky, New York City (Her-tion from waiver of tort liability.

Melvin I. Walf New York City (Clark.

×

borne, NYU School of Law, New York City, DIRNBAUM V. UNITED STATES Cite as 588 F.2d 319 (1978)

for plaintiffs-appellees Avery and MacMilion Foundation, New York City, of counsel), Joel M. Gora, American Civil Liberties Un-Richard W. Zacks, Providence, R. I., and

Circuit Judges. Before MOORE, OAKES and GURFEIN,

GURFEIN, Circuit Judge:

of mail were inspected and copied in this existence of the project over 215,000 pieces letters were chosen at random. During the Selection criteria were employed, but some York, photocopied, and then returned to destined for the U.S.S.R., or originating postal there, were selected by agents in New received from, the Soviet Union. Letters mail which American citizens sent to, or Agency ("CIA") covertly opened first class 1953 to 1973), the Central Intelligence For twenty years (from approximately authorities for ultimate delivery.

United States-Soviet mail that the CIA in making selections from the Such lists were used as additional guides by which it had an "internal security" interest. categories of persons or organizations in FBI provided the CIA with the names and Director Hoover gave his approval, and the SRPOINTER, and the CIA offered to share of the CIA's East Coast mail project, known the project's "take" with the FBI by the cryptonyms HTLINGUAL tion ("FBI") was informed of the existence In 1958, the Federal Bureau of Investigapassed FBI and

1. Senate Select Committee to Study Governtral intelligence Agency Mail Opening Activities in the United States (A. 179-235) [hereinof Justice, Report Concerning Investigation and after D. J. Report). Prosecutorial Decisions with Respect to Cen-[hereinafter Rockefeller Report]; Department 636; Commission on CIA Activities Within the (Pl.Ex. 11) [hereinafter Senate Report]. Gener United States, Report to the President (1975) opening program may be found at id., at 559al discussion of the history of the CIA's mail Activities, Final Report, Book III, at 571 (1976) mental Operations With Respect to Intelligence

at 13. The CIA released photocopies through the CIA check point. D.J. Report mestic subversion. cy's mission with respect to suspected dosome letters to the FBI in aid of that agen-

States from the Soviet Union.3 opened in 1968, while arriving in the United route to the U.S.S.R., in 1970 and respectively. the opened letters had been intercepted en § 1346(b)) under the Federal Tort Claims In the cases of Birnbaum and MacMillen, Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2671-2680 ("the Act"),2 ferred on the district courts (28 and B. Leonard Avery, whose mail was invoking the exclusive jurisdiction United States for compensatory damages, opened and copied, separately Norman Birnbaum, Mary Rule MacMillen Avery's letter sued the U.S.C.

States appeals. each plaintiff. 436 F.Supp. 967, also required to send a letter of apology to amount of $1,000. The United States was plaintiff individually for damages in the that the United States was liable to each case himself, 28 U.S.C. § 2402, and found Although an advisory jury was empanelled, the District Judge, as required, tried the New York (Hon. Jack B. Weinstein, Judge). District Court for the Eastern District of The three cases were consolidated in the From this judgment the United plete immunity against suit for torts com-United States, as sovereign, possessed com-Before the Act was passed in 1945, the letters. MacMillen sought to bring a class acalso asked for the return of all copies of this der 28 U.S.C. § 2675, are conceded. Birntaum

3. Avery's son, Michael, who sent the letter, His claim has withstood a motion to dismiss.

Avery v. United States, 434 F.Supp. 937 (D.Conn.1977) (Clarie, J.). sued separately in the District of Connecticut.

4. Plaintiff MacMillen's effort to convert her Waincrain 200 College Was denied by Judge is to be applied All parties have stipulated that New York law F.2d 872, 874 (9th Cir. 1975).

527 F.2d 1252, 1255 (2d Cir. 1975); Gibson v. (3d Cir. 1972); Morris v. United States, 521

United States, 457 F.2d 1391, 1392 & n. 1 Myers & Myers, Inc. v. U. S. Postal Service, lacks subject matter jurisdiction. the statutory exceptions; the district court tion. If the claims in suit fall within one of acts done pursuant to a discretionary funccreating an exemption from liability for loss or miscarriage of mail; (3) § 2680(a), exempting from the Act any liability for from the ambit of the Act; (2) § 2680(b),

6. MacMillen and Avery simply alleged that ance with the law of the place where the acts interests protected by the Fourth Amendment interest in the contents of his mail, and his "damage to his privacy, his exclusive property person, would be liable to plaintiff in accordstances where the United States, if a private A. 6; see A. 174. Birnbaum claims "injured under circum-

> U.S.C. § 1346(b), gives the District Court curred. (Emphasis added). the place where the act or omission occlaimant in accordance with the law of a private person, would be liable to the circumstances where the United States, if scope of his office or employment, under Government while acting within the death caused by the negligent or wrongmoney damages . . . for injury or claims against the United States, for exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions on The jurisdictional grant of the Act, 28 loss of property, or personal injury or ful act or omission of any employee of the state law if executed by an employee of a private person. al injury" would give rise to liability under was a "personal injury" as defined by state tion of the subject matter only (1) if there The District Court, therefore, had jurisdiclaw, and (2) if the acts causing the "person-

Personal Injury

appeared that no plaintiff was touched 759 (2d Dept. 1961); see also N.Y. Gen. Con. Halio v. Lurie, 15 A.D.2d 62, 222 N.Y.S.2d 729 (1961); Ferrara v. Galluchio, 5 N.Y.2d known category of tort. Battalla v. State, ing, New York recognizes as "personal inju-.aw § 37-a (McKinney). 16, 176 N.Y.S.2d 996, 152 N.E.2d 249 (1958); 10 N.Y.2d 237, 219 N.Y.S.2d 34, 176 N.E.2d the sole damage claim was mental sufferphysically or harmed financially, and that Although upon the consolidated trial it mental suffering that results from a

This provision has been interpreted to include al, "every variety of injury to a person's body, feelings or reputation." Bonilla v. Reeves, 49 Misc.2d 273, 279, 267 N.Y.S.2d 374, 381 (Sup. 201 N.Y. 215, 94 N.E. 644 (1911), and, in gener-732, 237 N.E.2d 876 (1968), invasion of privacy [by appropriation, see N.Y.Civ. Rights Law §§ 50, 51 (McKinney)], Riddle v. MacFadden, under the rubric of personal injury: mental distress, Weicker v. Weicker, 53 Misc.2d 570, grounds, 28 A.D.2d 138, 283 N.Y.S.2d 385 (1st 279 N.Y.S.2d. 852 (Sup.Ct.), rev'd on other 1967), aff'd, 22 N.Y.2d 8, 290 N.Y.S.2d Bonilla v. Reeves, 49

New York alternatively for the following: (1) invasion of the common law right to apinion that an action in tort would lie in action under the law of New York seriatim. privacy; (2) injury to common law copytional right. pers; and (3) direct violation of constituright and property interest in private pa-Basis for Liability Under State Tort Law The District Court held in a scholarly We review these causes of

Common law right to privacy

with the right of the plaintiff 'to be let except that each represents an interference otherwise have almost nothing in common are tied together by the common name, but by comprehends four distinct rights, "which advisers of 3 Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652A (1977), agree that the right to priva-Law of Torts, § 117 (4th ed. 1971), and the established. Both Dean W. Prosser, cosely termed "the right to privacy" is well [1] The manifold nature of what is Prosser at 804. The statement are: The four privacy rights listed in the Re-

- a) unreasonable intrusion upon the seclusion of another
- b) appropriation of the other's name or likeness or
- c) unreasonable publicity given to the other's private life .
- d) publicity that unreasonably places the other in a false light before the public.

§ 652A (1977).

at 378-79; cf. LaCrone v. Ohio Bell Tel. Co., 8 Restatement, supra, § 652B, comment b, such an intrusion. As described by the intrusion may occur through and reproducing plaintiffs' mail constituted [one's] private and personal mail . Restatement, violation of the right against The activities of the Government in opening from unreasonable intrusion by another. a single right—the right to seclusion free These cases all concern infringements of "opening

Cite as 538 F.2d 319 (1978)

(intrusion by eavesdropping). 114 Ohio App. 299, 182 N.E.2d 15 (1961)

priation and commercial exploitation of the at 447, and denied a remedy for the approcy' has not as yet found an abiding place in plaintiff's likeness. our jurisprudence," 171 N.Y. at 556, 64 N.E. Privacy, 4 Harv.L.Rev. 193 (1890), a 4 to 3 places its reliance principally on the famous common law right to privacy. ever, that New York does not recognize a observed that "the so-called 'right of privamajority of the New York Court of Appeals ticle by Warren and Brandeis, The Right to There, in commenting upon the seminal ar-Box Company, 171 N.Y. 538, 64 N.E. 442. 1902 case of Roberson v. Rochester Folding Appellant United States contends, how-Appellant of an appropriation does not imply a rejecpriation is only one. As Holmes observed, court rejected a privacy right in the context Law at 204 (1945 ed.). That the Roberson by simply giving a single name to all the crete torts within its ambit, of which approtion of a remedy for intrusion. cases to be accounted for," The Common "[w]e do not get a new and single principle the "right to privacy" includes several discause of action for intrusion. As indicated, guage in the case, Roberson does not bar a Whatever the sweep of some of the lan-and publication of a photograph which did have upheld a cause of saviion bacasse, unthe intrusion question, the court might well English law for enjoining the appropriation ously acknowledged as a species of tort. like appropriation, intrusion had lines previpapers as the foundation for an actionable consider the right to be secure in one's wrong. Had there been occasion to address her reputation. The court was not asked to not actually defame the plaintiff or injure its decision on the lack of precedent in Moreover, the court in Roberson rested

1029 (C.P.1765), the British Secretary Carrington, 95 Eng.Rep. 807, 19 Hox.St.Tr. he American Revolution. Such a right had been recognized before

Ct. 1966) arroad Dalaist .. Dalaist der the authority of the purported warrant messengers entered the plaintiff's house unto procure evidence of seditious libel. His court commented: and seized State issued a non-judicial search warrant protections of privacy more broadly. The pass to the home, Lord Camden read the Though the action was technically a tresand perused private papers.

papers are often the dearest property a destroy all the comforts of society; for [W]e can safely say there is no law in this they have done; if there was, it would country to justify the defendants in what

95 Eng.Rep. at 817-18.

for intrusions upon privacy that were the consequence of other torts. In Moore v. court allowed an award of damages for the construction of an elevated railway. certain easements of a homeowner by the viewed an action brought for impairment of York in which damages had been awarded certain rooms. And an earlier New York elevated trains could view the interiors of to the fact that the public travelling on the reduction in the value of the property due N.E. 997 (1892), sion of chattels from a home. Ives v. Humfered in the course of an unlawful repossesfor invasion of privacy by intrusion suf-Common Pleas case had granted damages phreys, 1 E. D. Smith 196 (1851).8 By 1902 there were actual cases in New York Elev. R. Co., 130 N.Y. 523, 29 the Court of Appeals re-The

Approved For Release 2008/09/15: CIA-RDP04M01816R000502000001-3

8. In Moore, supra, the New York court was following the holding of the House of Lords in Duke of Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, L.R. 5 E. & I. App. 418 (1872), sustain-Mosler Safe Co., / N.1.... 5... (1959); Gau-S.2d 975, 977, 164 N.E.2d 853, 854 (1959); Gauin New York is statutory. See, e. g., Flores v. Mosler Safe Co., 7 N.Y.2d 276, 280, 196 N.Y. effect that the only right of privacy recognized ion and would still appear to be valid precedent. To be sure, there are statements to the converted into a public highway. when property abutting a home was taken and tier v. American Broadcasting Co., Inc., 304 N.Y. 354, 358, 107 N.E.2d 485, 487 (1952); Kinnnerle v. New York Evening Journal, 262 N.Y. 99, 102, 186 N.E. 217, 217–18 (1933); Wo-inquiro v. Dalacarra Procs. 58 A.D.2d 45, 47, Ives were not overruled in the Roberson opin-Moore and tide set in strongly in favor of recognition" ed. More recently, the broad right to priva-43 Harv.L.Rev. 297 (1929) (by the writer); 804; see Note, The Right to Privacy Today, accepted in most jurisdictions. Prosser, at of the tort of invasion of privacy and it was ing with respect to the limited tort of apwhich the Roberson court thought was lackcy has secured the general recognition intrusion was at least derivatively protectthority was not lacking that freedom from Feinberg, Recent Developments in the Law propriation. & F. James, Law of Torts, § 9.6 at 682-83 author now sits on this court); 1 F. Harper of Privacy, 48 Col.L.Rev. 713 (1948) (the (1956).⁹ When Roberson was decided, then, au-In the nineteen-thirties "the and Justice Brandeis dissenting in Olmstead more revealing of the spirit of the times, recent times, been held to be a violation of a single word about privacy. for the Constitution does not, of course, say warrant is a violation of the early recognition that opening mail without the Federal Bill of Rights, extending the v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478-79, Fourth Amendment in terms of privacy) 507, 19 L.Ed.2d 576 (1967) (conceptualizing Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 88 S.Ct. 727, 24 L.Ed. 877 (1878). Nothing could be Amendment. Intrusion upon the person has, in more Ex parte Jackson, 96 U.S. Compare Fourth ments upon privacy. Compare Woltowicz, Supra, at 860, 403 N.Y.S.2d at 219, 374 N.E.2d at 130 (as yet no New York recognition of comsions, as opposed to other sorts of infringeprivacy in consequence of unreasonable publicmon law "right to judicial relief for invasion of [emphasis added]) Compare Wojtowicz,

9. Most states and the District of Columbia rec-James, Law of Torts, supra, at 682-83; see, e. g., Pearson v. Dodd, 133 U.S.App.D.C. 279, 410 F.2d 701, cert. denied 395 U.S. 947, 89 S.Ct. ognize invasions of privacy as actionable torts. Prosser, supra, § 117 at 804, 1 F. Harper & F. ping); Sutherland v. Kroger Co., 144 W.Va. Co., supra (Ohio App.) (intrusion by wiretapintrusion in general); LaCrone v. Ohio Beil Tel. 2021, 23 L.Ed.2d 465 (1969) (recognizing tort of

> S.Ct. 564, 72 L.Ed. 944 (1928). refusing to apply the exclusionary rule of 25, 69 S.Ct. 1359, 93 L.Ed. 1782 (1949), while Frankfurter in Wolf v. Colorado, 338 U.S. vacy against arbitrary intrusion by the poannounced that "[t]he security of one's pri-S.Ct. 341, 58 L.Ed. 652 (1914), to the states, Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 34 Amendment-is basic to a free society." lice-which is at the core of the Fourth 342 U.S. 165, 172, 72 S.Ct. 205, 96 L.Ed. 183 contexts. See, e. g., Rochin v. California, been applied in numerous constitutional proscription against such intrusions has Id. 338 U.S. at 27, 69 S.Ct. at 1361. (1952) (use of stomach pump to extract S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488 (1958) (right to NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 466, 78 evidence violates Fourteenth Amendment); privacy); Katz v. United States, supra (pri-S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510 (1965) (marital pursue "lawful private interests privately"); vacy in conversation). Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 85 Justice it is hard to believe that the New York a more contemporary New York Court of cy 10 In sharp contrast to the reluctance of bar an action based on intrusion upon privarationale of the 1902 Roberson decision to Court of Appeals today would apply the the 1902 court to advance the common law, Appeals has said, in another context: In the light of the current jurisprudence, plaintiff here is that there is no New were a valid objection, the common law been enforced. York decision in which such a claim has The sum of the argument against [but] "if that

10. In the three-quarters of a century since Roson's name or photograph—has itself gained statutory protection. 1903 N.Y. Laws, c. 132. priation and commercial exploitation of a perthat was denied a remedy in that caseberson, the particular type of privacy invasion §§ 50, 51 (McKinney)]. §§ 1, 2 [current version at N.Y.Civ. Rights Law

11. The modern New York Court of Appeals has dence by altering or developing decisional law-See, e. g., Dole v. Dow Chem. Co., 30 N.Y.2d 143, 148-51, 331 N.Y.S.2d 382, 386-90, 282 responded in the past to new tren is in jurispru-genet period." [citation omitted] would now be what it was in the Planta-justice. decisional law to produce common-sense law tradition when we adapt and alter We act in the finest common-own function, in a field peculiarly nonan old and unsatisfactory court-made statutory, when we refuse to reconsider could, of course, be, but we abdicate our Legislative action there

N.E.2d 691, 694 (1951).11 Woods v. Lancet, 303 N.Y. 349, 355, 102 couched though it is in terms of the crimimoreover, by current legislative policy, against intrusion is supported in New York, that he does not have the consent of the nal sanction. New York Penal Law Article sender or receiver, he opens or reads a private communications when "[k]nowing that a person is guilty of tampering with 250 (Right to Privacy) § 250.25(1) provides 66, 78-80, 95 S.Ct. 2080, 45 L.Ed.2d would go beyond our function in finding ages from the criminal sanction, for that the implication of a remedy in money daniing the strands of policy which affect ear (1975). We think, however, that in gather-New York law. Cf. Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. sealed letter . now beyond the limit of civil as well as A recognition of a right to privacy penal indulgence.12 prophecy, intrusion into private papers is ." We do not force

THE RESERVE OF THE PROPERTY OF

rather than to depart from it, we are elso Tort Claims Act is to ascertain state law, Mindful that our role under the Federal la v. State, supra, 10 NY2d at 233-46, 219 N.Y.S.2d at 35-37, 176 N.E.2d at 739-31; 748-50, 191 N.E.2d 279, 281-84 (1963); (Banal-102 N.E.2J at 692-95. Woods v. Lancet, supra, 303 NIV. at 307-56,

12. We note in puriousarthermomentary which of action against intrusion under the law of the course of an opinion in which it uphrid:acause Law-$ 250.65 (against eavesdropping) dictum to a conspanion provision cettine Amal Corp., 25 N.Y.2d 560, 570 n. 3, 307 NWS.2d 647, 655 n. 3, 255 N.E.2d 765, 771 n. 3 (1970). District of Columbia. Nader v. General Wotors the New York Court of Appealsthas actioned in - unthe aware that "[l]aw does change with times and circumstances, and not merely through legislative reforms." Bernhardt v. Polygraphic Co., 350 U.S. 198, 209, 76 S.Ct. 273, 279-80, 100 L.Ed. 199 (1956) (Frankfurter, J., concurring); see Battalla v. State, supra. A refusal to accept a perceptible trend may be as much a failure to follow state law as a refusal to apply existing precedent because it is somewhat ambiguous. Our reading of past cases and our assessment of current legal thinking lead us to the judgment that the New York Court of Appeals would recognize an action for violation of the right to be free from unreasonable intrusion.18 We agree with the District Court that there is a claim for relief in New York against a private person for intrusion upon the privacy of another, and that such a claim includes the opening and reading of sealed mail.14

Common Law Copyright and Property Interest in Private Papers

- [2] The District Court has written a scholarly thesis supporting the view that
- In Galella v. Onassis, 487 F.2d 986, 995 n. 12
 (2d Cir. 1973), we said:

Although the New York courts have not yet recognized a common law right of privacy, if we were required to reach the question, we would be inclined to agree with the court below that when again faced with the issue the Court of Appeals may well modify or distinguish its 1902 holding in Roberson v. Rochester Folding-Box Co., 171 N.Y. 538, 64 N.E. 442 (1902), that "The so-called right of privacy has not as yet found an abiding place in our jurisprudence." There is substantive support today for the proposition that privacy is a "basic right" entitled to legal protection, Time v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374, 415, 87 S.Ct. 534, 17 L.Ed.2d 456 (1967) (Fortas, J., dissenting) There is an emerging recognition of privacy as a distinct, constitutionally protected right. Roe v. Ingraham, 480 F.2d 102 (2d Cir. 1973), (Friendly, J.).

14. Nor is it fruitful to consider the analogous common law tort of trespass to chattels as a ground of action here. The surreptitious opening and reproduction of the letters without appropriating or physically damaging them does not fit easily under the rubric of trespass to chattels. That cause of action requires, either a dispossession of, or restraint on, the chattel, Wintringham v. Lafoy, 7 Cow. 735 (N.Y.Sup.Ct. 1827); Hanmer v. Wilsey, 17 Wend. 91 (N.Y. Sup.Ct. 1837), or its impairment by intermeddling, Succeny-Vacuum Oil Co. v. Balley, 202 the reading of private mail was a violation of a common law copyright of the correspondents under New York law. 436 F.Supp. at 978-83. Judge Weinstein concedes that the New York courts have not had a case directly in point. We do not doubt that the New York courts accept the English doctrine of Gee v. Pritchard, 36 Eng.Rep. 670 (Ch. 1818) that private letters, even if of no literary value, are protected by common law copyright. Woolsey v. Judd, 11 Super. (4 Duer) 379 (N.Y.1855); see Folsom v. Marsh, 9 Fed.Cas. No. 4,901, p. 342 (C.C.D.Mass.1841) (per Story, J.). But the common law copyright is, in essence, a right of first publication, 1 Nimmer on Copyright §§ 4.02, 4.03 & 4.07 (1978); Estate of Hemingway v. Random House, 53 Misc.2d 462, 464, 279 N.Y.S.2d 51, 54-55 (Sup.Ct.), aff'd by order, 29 A.D.2d 633, 285 N.Y.S.2d 568 (1st Dept.1967), aff'd on other grounds, 23 N.Y.2d 341, 296 N.Y.S.2d 771, 244 N.E.2d 250 (1968), which of necessity includes the right to suppress any publication by injunction. 15 Hence, although one

Misc. 364, 109 N.Y.S.2d 799 (Sup.Ct.1952); 1 Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 218(b) and Reporter's Note e; accord, Prosser, supra, at 77. Intermeddling is actionable only where the chattel has been "impaired as to its condition, quality or [material] value. ... " Restatement, id.; contra F. Pollock, Law of Torts 354 (12th ed. 1923). There was no dispossession or impairment here. Moreover, to the extent that Entick v. Carrington, supra, tends to support an action in trespass here, it also, as we have seen, implies an action that can be defined as intrusion upon privacy. Since the demise of the forms of action, we need not look further for state tort law than to the right of privacy which we have described. As the Supreme Court said in Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 304, 87 S.Ct. 1642, 1648, 18 L.Ed.2d 782 (1967):

We have recognized that the principal object of the Fourth Amendment is the protection of privacy rather than property, and have increasingly discarded fictional and procedural barriers rested on property concepts [citing cases].

This applies as well to the non-constitutional torts of privacy.

15. The preemption of state common law of copyright by the 1976 copyright law revision, 17 U.S.C. § 301(a), is not relevant to any common law copyright cause of action in this case, since under the new law preemption does not apply to causes of action arising before 1978. Id. § 301(b)(2).

BIRNBAUM v. UNITED STATES Cite as 588 F.2d 319 (1978)

327

may enjoin the publication of letters to effectuate their suppression, the damage remedy (defamation aside) would lie only if there were a spoliation of the right to a first publication which actually destroyed the value of the owner's right to seek a statutory copyright. See Szekely v. Eagle Lion Films, 140 F.Supp. 843, 849 (S.D.N.Y. 1956), aff'd, 242 F.2d 266 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 354 U.S. 922, 77 S.Ct. 1382, 1 L.Ed.2d 1437 (1957). Since the owner of the letter did not consent to its publication, he did not lose his right to first publication. See Nimmer, § 4.03. And the mere copying and limited distribution of the letter did not constitute a distribution to the public that could cause damage to the value of the owner's continuing right to secure a statutory copyright. See Estate of Hemingway, supra, 53 Misc.2d at 464-65, 279 N.Y.S.2d at 55. We would find it strained, in any event, to say that the reading of the plaintiffs' letters by several persons, none of whom circulated them to the world, is a "publication" that destroys the value of the work in question. See 2 Nimmer § 8.23; cf. Universal Copyright Convention, art. VI (Paris 1971) (publication defined as "general distribution"); Berne Convention (Brussels 1948), art. 4(4) (publication involves making works available in "sufficient quantities"); see also Berne Convention (Paris 1971), art. 3(3).16 Hence, we do not find the tort of infringement of common law copyright applicable in the instant case.

Violation of Constitutional Rights as Tortious Conduct

[3-5] The District Court also held that the violation of plaintiffs' federal constitu-

16. That limited viewing does not constitute the sort of publication that transgresses an owner's common law copyright was implicitly recognized in the famous case of Baker v. Libbie, 210 Mass. 599, 97 N.E. 109 (1912). There, Chief Justice Rugg distinguished between the right of an author of a letter and the right of the holder of the physical letter by treating the former as a copyright in the ideas and expression and the latter as a proprietary right in the physical material. The Massachusetts court then went on to hold that the author's copyright would permit restraint' of "publication in the sense of making public through printing or multiplication of copies," but not the right to tional rights is a separate ground for liability under state law.17 We do not believe that the Federal Tort Claims Act comprehends federal constitutional torts in its reference to the "law of the place" under § 1346(b). As described in the House Judiciary Committee Report dealing with the Act's direct predecessor bill, see Dalehite v. United States, 346 U.S. 15, 26, 73 S.Ct. 956, 97 L.Ed. 1427 (1953), the applicable rules of substantive decision, except where otherwise specified, were to be drawn from "local law." H.Rep.2245, 77th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9 (1942). Attention was focused on everyday torts, particularly the sort of negligence of which automobile drivers are guilty. Even though federal law is supreme in the state courts, U.S.Const., art. VI; Testa v. Katt, 330 U.S. 386, 391, 67 S.Ct. 810, 91 L.Ed. 967 (1947); General Oil Co. v. Crain, 209 U.S. 211, 226-28, 28 S.Ct. 475, 52 L.Ed. 754 (1908), one does not think of the specific terminology of "local law" except to describe a system different from federal law. In the absence of any indication that Congress conceived of "local law" under the Act as comprehending federal constitutional torts—only a glimmer until Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 66 S.Ct. 773, 90 L.Ed. 939 (1946)—we are not prepared to adopt so unusually broad a reading of the "law of the place" requirement. Moreover, by adopting the "law of the place" as the source for rules of decision under the Federal Tort Claims Act, Congress expressly negated any possible inference that federal courts were to exercise any "common lawmaking" power to fashion torts under the prevent a transfer of the letter itself. Id. at 607, 97 N.E. at 112. Thus, the court appeared to treat the copyright as uninfringed by a limited transfer (and, presumably, perusal).

17. This ruling becomes significant only if it is held that violation of the right to privacy as a tort does not exist under New York law. Upon that alternative assumption, however, we must address the question. Moreover, as we shall see later, the right of action against the United States does not depend upon a constitutional violation by the CIA, but rather upon the commission of acts which were beyond the delegated functions of the Agency.

Act in the interest of national uniformity. ¹⁸ Compare Textile Workers Union v. Lincoln Mills, 353 U.S. 448, 77 S.Ct. 923, 1 L.Ed.2d 972 (1957).

Since Congress restricted the basis for liability under the Act to the "law of the place," we think that it would be a tour de force to consider direct violations of the federal constitution as "local law" torts. Such a rule might be tantamount to a bypass of the sovereign immunity of the United States without the consent of Congress. We hold, accordingly, that the claim for relief may not be sustained on that basis.

III

Having found that each of the plaintiffs suffered a personal injury as a result of an intrusion upon privacy by the Government that would give rise to a private law tort under the law of New York, we determine that the initial jurisdictional requirement of 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b) has been met.

We must now consider whether the Government may claim an exception from liability under the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 2680. We will focus upon three exceptions: (1) § 2680(h), for certain specified torts; (2) § 2680(b), for miscarriage of mail; and (3) § 2680(a), for discretionary functions.

A. § 2680(h)

[6] Under this subsection of the Federal Tort Claims Act, there is an exception for: Any claim arising out of assault, battery, false imprisonment, false arrest, malicious prosecution, abuse of process,

- 18. The cases on appeal arose before the 1973 Amendments to the Act, so we need not consider any effect the Amendments should be deemed to have. Boger, Gitenstein & Verkuil, The Federal Tort Claims Act Intentional Torts Amendment: An Interpretative Analysis, 54 N.C.L.Rev. 497, 520-21 (1976).
- 19. When the Act was amended in 1973, this was assumed. See S.Rep.No.588, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. 3 (1973).
- Our decision in Marine Ins. Co. v. United States, 378 F.2d 812 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 389 libel, slander, misrepresentation, deceit, or interference with contract rights.

Although this exception might be construed as excepting all intentional torts, the Government does not urge that reading upon us. In any event, the jurisdictional statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b), covers "wrongful" as well as negligent acts. See Hatahley v. United States, 351 U.S. 173, 76 S.Ct. 745, 100 L.Ed. 1065 (1956); Dalehite v. United States, supra, 346 U.S. at 45, 73 S.Ct. at 972-73 (dictum). Thus, it has been held that the torts of trespass and invasion of privacy do not fall within the exception of § 2680(h). See Hatahley, supra (trespass); Black v. Sheraton Corp. of America, 184 U.S.App.D.C. 46, 54-56, 564 F.2d 531, 539-41 (1977) (invasion of privacy). 19

B. § 2680(b): The Postal Exception

[7] We turn next to the postal exception, which also requires little discussion. The exception relates to "[a]ny claim arising out of the loss, miscarriage, or negligent transmission of letters or postal matter."

The language of the exception itself indicates that it was not aimed to encompass intentional acts. Had Congress intended to bring intentional disturbance of the integrity of a letter within the postal exception, it would not have used the term "negligent transmission." Nor were the letters lost or miscarried. "Miscarriage" in the context of mail means misdelivery.

We hold, therefore, that the postal exception does not apply to save the United States from liability in these cases.²⁰

U.S. 953, 88 S.Ct. 335, 19 L.Ed.2d 361 (1967) is not to the contrary. Marine Insurance held that where customs agents had temporarily removed and treated a mailed package of emeralds with a fluorescent powder to detect a thief, the subsequent loss of the package by postal authorities fell within the postal exception. The claim in Marine Insurance was not for redress because of the temporary removal and treatment of the package, but for its subsequent "loss" from the postal system, which would have occurred even if the interception had not taken place. 378 F.2d at 815.

329

BIRNBAUM v. UNITED STATES

Cite as 588 F.2d 319 (1978)

C. § 2680(a): "Discretionary Function"
Exception

Finally, we turn to consider whether the Government's mail opening project is removed from the scope of the Federal Tort Claims Act by § 2680(a), which provides an exception for:

Any claim based upon an act or omission of an employee of the Government, exercising due care, in the execution of a statute or regulation, whether or not such statute or regulation be valid, or based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal agency or an employee of the Government, whether or not the discretion involved be abused.

This is not a case where Congress has passed a mail-opening statute that is being challenged as unconstitutional. It is common ground that there is no statute or regulation which sanctions the mail opening procedure engaged in by the CIA. Our inquiry relates therefore only to whether the CIA personnel were engaging in a "discretionary function," rather than executing a policy required by "statute or regulation." The "discretionary function" exception is listinct from the exception based upon a statute or regulation. See Dalehite v. United States, supra, 346 U.S. at 32-34, 73 S.Ct. at 966-67.

[8] We state our conclusions in summay form. We hold: (1) that a discretionary unction can only be one within the scope of authority of an agency or an official, as lelegated by statute, regulation, or jurisdicional grant; (2) that the CIA's legislative tharter gave the Agency no authority to gather intelligence on domestic matters; (3) hat the Agency's partnership with the FBI in the mail opening project led it to transress the limitations of its charter; and (4) hat there was no "discretion" to engage in hese mail opening activities, so that the iscretionary function exception does not pply. Hence, we do not reach the question

l. By way of contrast, in Kiiskila v. United States, 466 F.2d 626 (7th Cir. 1972); a decision was treated as discretionary because the appliwhether a properly delegated but unconstitutional activity would come within the "discretionary function" exception. Nor do we reach the question posed by the Government: whether Congress intended to allow actions to be brought under the Act which challenge discretionary acts as unconstitutional. We note that, of course, such acts or omissions alleged to be unconstitutional-for example, violations of procedural due process-would support liability under the Act only if they constituted independent torts under state law. It would be an unusual situation when such a concatenation of wrongs would occur. But cf. Myers & Myers, Inc. v. U. S. Postal Service, supra, at 1260 & n.8.

1.

A discretionary function can derive only from properly delegated authority. Authority generally stems from a statute or regulation, or at least, from a jurisdictional grant that brings the discretionary function within the competence of the agency. Discretion may be as elastic as a rubber-band, but it, too, has a breaking point. An act that is clearly outside the authority delegated cannot be considered as an "abuse of discretion." See Hatahley v. United States, supra; Myers & Myers, Inc. v. U. S. Postal Service, supra, at 1261 (no discretion to violate regulations); Griffin v. United States, 500 F.2d 1059, 1068 (3d Cir. 1974) (same); United Air Lines v. Wiener, 335 F.2d 379, 393-94 (9th Cir.) (same), cert. dismissed, 379 U.S. 951, 85 S.Ct. 452, 13 L.Ed.2d 549 (1964).21

In Hatahley v. United States, horses belonging to Indians were rounded up on the public range and sent to slaughter by federal agents on the ground that they were "abandoned" horses under a Utah statute which permitted such horses to be eliminated. Under the Utah statute, no notice was required. The Federal Range Code, however, required that written notice, together with an order to remove livestock from the cable regulation was interpreted as reserving to the decisionmaker broad discretion, including "the authority to grant exceptions." Id. at 628.

Approved For Release 2008/09/15 : CIA-RDP04M01816R000502000001-3

public range, be served on the alleged violator as a precondition to impounding the animals. The federal range manager made a policy decision to prosecute a vigorous campaign to destroy the Indians' horses. This campaign went on for several years. 351 U.S. at 176, 76 S.Ct. at 749. The range manager apparently determined that under the Utah statute he was not required to give the notice mandated by the Federal Range Code.

The Supreme Court held that "both the written notice and failure to comply [therewith] are express conditions precedent to the employment of local procedures" under the Range Code, and that federal agents "are required to follow the procedures there established." Id. at 178, 76 S.Ct. at 750. The United States was held liable for "the willful torts" of its employees, since 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b) provides for liability for "wrongful" acts such as trespass. Id. at 180–81, 76 S.Ct. at 751.

The Court then considered the exception in 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a). It held that the agents had not exercised the "due care" required by the exception, noting that "'[d]ue care' implies at least some minimal concern for the rights of others." The Court disposed of the contention that the "discretionary function" exception applied to these acts beyond the scope of regulations by declaring that "[t]hese acts were wrongful trespasses not involving discretion on the part of the agents . . . " Id. at 181, 76 S.Ct. at 752.

Hatahley is significant authority in several respects. First, it had never been decided before Hatahley that notice was required under the Federal Code when the agents were engaged in enforcing the Utah statute. In fact, even the Court of Appeals had held below that no such notice was required. 220 F.2d 666 (10th Cir. 1955). Second, the agents were engaged in a policy promulgated by the range manager and in force for several years. Yet the Court held that because the notice required by the regulation was not given, the policy judgment in question was without authority and therefore did not concern "any problem of a 'discretionary function' under the Act [citation omitted]." 351 U.S. at 181, 76 S.Ct. at 752.

The Hatahley analysis is strikingly relevant to the case at bar; the CIA's mail opening project could not have been a "discretionary act" if the Agency lacked authority to conduct such a program. We must, therefore, determine the scope of the Agency's legally delegated competence.

2.

[9] The Central Intelligence Agency was the grandchild of the Office of Strategic Services ("OSS"), which conducted the United States' successful intelligence and special operations campaigns during the Second World War. As the war drew to a close, General William J. Donovan, head of the OSS, recommended to President Roosevelt that a central authority be formed to obtain intelligence from abroad and to determine national intelligence goals. It was proposed that this agency would coordinate the intelligence activities of other departments, such as the military services, but that the new central intelligence authority would have "'no police or law enforcement functions, either at home or abroad." Rockefeller Report at 46.

After some debate within the Executive Branch, President Truman issued a directive creating the Central Intelligence Group, early in 1946. The Presidential Directive was explicit in limiting the Group's role to foreign intelligence gathering. It declared that "[n]o police, law enforcement or internal security functions shall be exercised" and that [n]othing herein shall be construed to authorize the making of investigations inside the continental limits of the United States and its possessions, except as provided by law and Presidential directives. Presidential Directive, Coordination of Federal Foreign Intelligence Activities, F.R. Doc. 46-1951 (Feb. 1, 1946); see Rockefeller

The Central Intelligence Agency was chartered by Legislative enactment in 1947. The scope of its authority and the limitations there
Donovan's
ence of t Critical pre ter, contain of 1947, P Stat. 497, (e), placed sion of the directed the correlate ing to the vide for t

such intel

§ 102(d)(3). "[t]hat the subpena, law nal-security

The mean fied by refer Members of failure precis cy's limitatio might permi activities in See Hearings Comm. on E Dept., 80th C 75, 437-39, 4 sponded to the posed Act to cy and, specifi the CIA into H.Rep.No.961, (1947);Nati § 102(d).

to make cer functions of were careful ters, to mili national sec now running else's busine lishing anoth

I do not Intelligence, sponsibility t tic activities

Hearings at 438

Report at 51.

BIRNBAUM v. UNITED STATES

Cite as 588 F.2d 319 (1978)

331

tions thereon were patterned upon General Donovan's recommendations and the experience of the Central Intelligence Group. Critical provisions of this legislative charter, contained in the National Security Act of 1947, Pub.L.No.253 § 102(d) & (e), 61 Stat. 497, codified at 50 U.S.C. § 403(d) & (e), placed the Agency under the supervision of the National Security Council and edirected the Agency to correlate and evaluate intelligence relating to the national security, and [to] provide for the appropriate dissemination of such intelligence within the Government

§ 102(d)(3). It also provided specifically "[t]hat the Agency shall have no police, subpena, law-enforcement powers, or internal-security functions."

The meaning of these provisions is clarified by reference to their legislative history. Members of Congress were concerned that failure precisely to spell out the new Agency's limitations in the National Security Act might permit the Agency to expand its activities into internal security matters. See Hearings on H.R.2319 Before the House Comm. on Expenditures in the Executive Dept., 80th Cong., 1st Sess., at 126-28, 170-75, 437-39, 479-81 (1947).²² Congress responded to this issue by amending the proposed Act to define the duties of the Agency and, specifically, to restrain any entry by the CIA into "internal security" matters. H.Rep.No.961, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. 3-4 National Security Act, supra, (1947);§ 102(d).

22. Legislators wanted to make certain that the activities and the functions of the Central Intelligence Agency were carefully confined to international matters, to military matters, and to matters of national security. We have enough people now running around butting into everybody else's business in this country without establishing another agency to do so.

I do not think it would be the Central Intelligence Agency's right, authority, or responsibility to check on the ordinary domestic activities of the average American citizen.

Hearings at 438-39 (Rep. Brown).

Furthermore, National Security Council Intelligence Directives, designed to guide the CIA, permitted so-called "overt" collection of foreign intelligence within the United States (i. e., collection with the knowing and voluntary cooperation of sources) but not "clandestine" collection in the United States (i. e., collection without the source's awareness). Rockefeller Report at 55.

Thus, all parties involved in drafting and passing the legislation stated expressly at times, and indicated implicitly throughout, that the CIA was not to become concerned with developing intelligence as to domestic or internal security matters, except "for protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure." § 102(d)(3), 50 U.S.C. § 403(d)(3). The subject matter of the Agency's interest was to be foreign activity, not activity at home, ²³ and the Agency was not to have any "internal security functions." § 102(d)(3), 50 U.S.C. § 403(d)(3).

As noted, from 1958 on, the CIA began to examine intercepted mail not only to satisfy its own need for intelligence about the U.S. S.R., but to satisfy as well the FBI's requirements for counterespionage information and data on "peace organizations, antiwar leaders, black activists, and women's groups." Senate Report at 624.24 By the mid-sixties, then, the CIA had undertaken an operation that involved broad and indiscriminate inspection of private mail with a view to obtaining information on matters of domestic, as well as foreign, concern.

There was no room in the charter for a "policy judgment" that the CIA should in-

- 23. Under § 102(e) of the National Security Act, 50 U.S.C. § 403(e), the Director of the CIA may obtain by written request from the FBI such information as may be essential to national security. But there is no correlative mandate to assist the FBI's domestic operations in a covert manner.
- 24. An FBI internal memorandum of 1966 illustrates the sorts of information garnered by the CIA's mail openings: intelligence "regarding persons involved in the peace movements, anti-Vietnam demonstrations, women's organizations, 'teach-ins', racial matters." Senate Report at 633 & n.336.

volve itself in gathering secret data on domestic problems. Indeed the CIA knew this as well as anyone. An Agency internal memorandum admitted that "there is no legal basis for monitoring postal communications in the United States except during time of war or national emergency." 25

We find, therefore, that the CIA was acting so far beyond its authority that it could not have been exercising a function which could in any proper sense be called "discretionary." ²⁶ See Hatahley, supra.

3.

Though we hold that these activities of the CIA were beyond the realm of discretion, we cannot share entirely the moral concern of the District Court over these activities, for the security of the nation was said to be involved. We assume that the CIA officials meant well by their country. Even testimony before the Senate Committee by a principal CIA official, stating that he knew that the mail opening was illegal but thought it in the national interest, Senate Report at 605, gives us no cause for a homily. As the Attorney General reported:

The issue involved in these past programs, in the Department's view, relates less to personal guilt than to official government practices that extended over

25. Quoted in Rockefeller Report at 108.

26. The only possibly arguable escape from this compelling conclusion might be if it could be established that the President had actually authorized the mail openings under his Article II power to conduct foreign affairs. See United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 57 S.Ct. 216, 81 L.Ed. 255 (1936); cf. United States v. United States District Court, 407 U.S. 297, 308-09, 92 S.Ct. 2125, 32 L.Ed.2d 752 (1972) (Keith) (leaving open the question whether the Fourth Amendment warrant requirements applies to the President's surveillance power respecting "the activities of foreign powers" or their agents). Of course, these cases do not in any way imply that the President may ignore a specific limitation placed by Congress on the powers of an agency it has created by statute. But, in any event, it has been demonstrated above that these particular mail opening activities were not directed against "activities of foreign powers" or their agents. And we have learned that the President has no special constitutional power in two decades. In a very real sense, this case [mail opening] involves a general failure of the government, including the Department of Justice itself, over the period of the mail opening programs, ever clearly to address and to resolve for its own internal regulation the constitutional and legal restrictions.

D.J. Report at 5. It appears to us that it would be hypocritical for judges now to assess the activity in terms of moral censure.

4.

Nevertheless, while, as federal agents, the CIA personnel may still have an absolute immunity from state suits, Butz v. Economou, — U.S. —, — & n.22, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 2905 & n.22, 57 L.Ed.2d 895 (1978); Granger v. Marek, 583 F.2d 781 (6th Cir. 1978); see Howard v. Lyons, 360 U.S. 593, 79 S.Ct. 1331, 3 L.Ed.2d 1454 (1959), the CIA agents' qualified immunity in federal constitutional suits arising out of this set of circumstances, see Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619 (1971), may well not protect them if it be found that their mail openings were "unconstitutional action on a massive scale." Economou, - U.S. at -, 98 S.Ct. at 2910.

matters involving domestic intelligence. Keith, supra; compare Youngstown Sheet & Tube v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 72 S.Ct. 863, 96 L.Ed. 1153 (1952).

There is, moreover, an absence of proof upon this record that the CIA was acting under direct presidential authority. See generally, Senate Report at 594-99. The untimely death of Allen Dulles, long time Director of the CIA, and the deaths of several successive presidents make such proof unavailable. President Nixon, the sole surviving President from this period, does not recollect being told about the mail openings. Senate Report at 597-98. Nor would speculation about what our presidents knew or did not know be fruitful or in the public interest. Though courts might feel compelled to delve further into that matter if an agent's feet were being held to the fire in a criminal case, there is no such compulsion in an action against the United States for money damages.

Sinc United tute a employ 28 U.S claims United agains

That who, in didate now be financi functio a judici stantia tal acti absolut has bee pare E Biddle, cert. de L.Ed. 1:

torney verse a pensatic from the ty inter entire b Governm ceeded t authorit a breach lack of a ty the U
pensate

The

FTCA.

This a tion providevelopm stitutions creasinglibility for analogou recovery toms of is self-ev accordin 176 N.Y.

BIRNBAUM v. UNITED STATES Cite as 588 F.2d 319 (1978)

333

Since a judgment in an action against the United States under the FTCA will constitute a judgment in bar in favor of the employee whose act gave rise to the claim, 28 U.S.C. § 2676, it is likely, however, that claims for torts would be made against the United States rather than, as Bivens suits, against the employee.

That is as it should be. The CIA agent who, in other days, might have been a candidate for a citation of merit, should not now be made to suffer alone an ignominious financial ruin. The term "discretionary function", left obscure by Congress, permits a judicial interpretation which achieves substantial justice without chilling governmental action any more than an erosion of the absolute immunity of Government officials has been thought to chill such action. Compare Economou, supra, with Gregoire v. Biddle, 177 F.2d 579, 581 (2d Cir. 1949), cert. denied, 339 U.S. 949, 70 S.Ct. 803, 94 L.Ed. 1363 (1950).

The responsibility is lodged, under the FTCA, where the careful report of the Attorney General says it belongs—on a diverse and complacent officialdom. Compensation for incidental harm resulting from the Government's pursuit of its security interests is more justly borne by the entire body politic than by agents of the Government, who, out of patriotic zeal, exceeded the outer limits of their delegated authority. So long enduring and pervasive a breach of privacy, in the face of an utter lack of authority, is fittingly a responsibility the United States should assume to compensate the plaintiffs.

This approach to the discretionary function provision, moreover, is congruent with developments in the interpretation of constitutional and statutory law that have increasingly extended state and municipal liability for civil rights violations that are analogous to the privacy tort involved in the instant case. Compare Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer, 427 U.S. 445, 96 S.Ct. 2666, 49 L.Ed.2d 614 (1976), and Monell v. Department of Social Serv., 436 U.S. 658, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 56 L.Ed.2d 611 (1978).

27. The Court of Appeals in Ferrara permitted recovery in a case in which "permanent symptoms of anxiety" were present, noting that "[i]t is self-evident that every case must be decided according to the facts peculiar to it." Id. at 22, 176 N.Y.S.2d at 1000, 152 N.E.2d at 253.

We hold that the exception in § 2680(a) is no bar to recovery against the United States.

IV

[10] Having determined that the United States is liable to these plaintiffs for harm caused by mail openings, we must review the District Court's award of $1000 in compensatory damages and of an apology to each plaintiff.

Although damages under the Act are governed by state law, Hatahley, supra, 351 U.S. at 182, 76 S.Ct. at 752, the Act limits recovery to compensatory damages and provides that the United States shall not be liable for punitive damages, 28 U.S.C. § 2674. In New York, as we have seen, freedom from mental disturbance is a protected interest, but there must be a "'guarantee of genuineness in the circumstances of the case." Ferrara v. Galluchio, supra, 5 N.Y.2d at 21, 176 N.Y.S.2d at 999-1000, 152 N.E.2d at 252 (quoting Prosser).27 The question is whether the testimony of the plaintiffs sustains a finding of mental anguish under New York law, in which event the judgment for $1,000 each would not be excessive, or whether there was no actual damage, in which case only nominal damages of one dollar would have been proper. Cf. Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 98 S.Ct. 1042, 55 L.Ed.2d 252 (1978) (construing § 1983).28

The answer is not easy. There was no finding of physical injury and no loss of employment. There also was no mental injury in the sense of "permanent symptoms of anxiety." Ferrara, supra.

28. Since cases have not arisen in New York in which there has been a judgment in damages for the tort of intrusion upon privacy, there is no direct precedent available, as Judge Weinstein observed.

The question whether a finding of mental anguish is sustainable is further complicated by two unusual features of these cases. First, the plaintiffs deliberately sought to find out under the Freedom of Information Act whether their mail had been tampered with. In direct response to their curiosity, they received the information which resulted in the purported injury. Thus, in a strict sense, "but for" the plaintiffs' acts in uncovering the openings, they might never have been made to suffer anguish over the Government's wrongs. Second, the letters interfered with were being transported to or from the Soviet Union, a closed society in which, as most people are aware, mail may be opened by secret police without "constitutional" restraint. Only the naive would be emotionally unprepared for the possibility that a letter might be opened in the Soviet Union. Under those circumstances, it is somewhat difficult to credit the proposition that a reasonable person would be shocked by the mere fact that a letter going to or coming from the U.S.S.R. had been opened at some point.

Although, in a sense, the plaintiffs brought their feelings of outrage upon themselves by seeking information, we do not believe, upon reflection, that this is a meaningful break in the chain of causation that links the mail openings to any anguish suffered. The mail opening was an intentional tort and it may be deemed to have been foreseeable that anguish might ensue if there were discovery. See Derosier v. New England Tel. & Tel. Co., 81 N.H. 451, 130 A. 145 (1925); Prosser, supra, at 263.29

More troublesome is the fact that plaintiffs should have been aware that their mail might be opened by the Soviet officials (particularly in the case of Ms. MacMillen,

29. Significantly, the CIA could not have refused to release this information under the Freedom of Information Act. Under the 1974 amendments, P.L. 93-502 § 2(b), an exception from disclosure is available with respect to an "agency conducting a lawful national security intelligence investigation," for confidential information "furnished only by [a] . . . confidential source." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(D). The use of the word "lawful" indicates that Congress understood that there could be unlawful who was writing to a well-known dissident). That could have convinced the trier of fact that there was no compensable damage. Indeed, the testimony of the plaintiffs with regard to their subjective feelings was both weak and meager. The nub of their testimony was that each felt "disappointment" that their own government could do such a thing. Such anguish is political rather than emotional, much as a member of a Senate investigating committee might feel toward the same revelation.30 The "injury" was principally to "their wounded faith in our democratic institutions," 436 F.Supp. at 989, a loss of faith probably shared by many Americans who do not expect compensation for such intellectual injuries.

The issue comes down to whether each plaintiff suffered any mental injury whatever from the knowledge that a single letter had been opened. As the District Judge properly charged the advisory jury (and we assume charged himself), the plaintiffs could not recover money damages as a vindication of the rights of the American people. Nor do we think that they may recover simply to deter future action, for this particular statute prohibits punitive damages—the traditional "smart money" remedy used to discourage repetitive conduct.

The District Court did find, however, that "the emotional distress these plaintiffs suffered was the sort that would be experienced by reasonable people under the almost unprecedented circumstances of these cases." 436 F.Supp. at 988. Though we could view this finding as one merely of damage presumed from the circumstances, worth only the nominal sum of one dollar, cf. Carey v. Piphus, supra, we interpret the finding more generously as determining that these plaintiffs, whose demeanor the intelligence investigations, and that the product of such operations would not be excepted from disclosure.

30. Except possibly for Senator Church, Chairman of the Senate Select Committee investigating intelligence activities, whose own personal mail to the Soviet Union had apparently been opened by the CIA. See Senate Report at 575-trial ju sonal a to the judge of Fed.R.(damage judgmenthat the lowable that the gy to might s collecto "money provide See Mo 1974); 1228 (36)

We ε judgme be sent

[12]

ground because trial, to under t that th denies Constitu mon lav Amendi ment, waiver mon lay enth A States, Glidden S.Ct. 14 rality o

31. In a ute of ! mail or opening 603-04 after. knowled was puthe New or of the second second trial judge observed, actually suffered personal anguish. We give "due regard . . . to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses." Fed.R.Civ.P. 52(a). Though the question of damages is close, we affirm the money judgments for $1,000 each, with the feeling that they represent the upper limit of allowable compensation in these cases. 31

[11] With regard to the Judge's order that the Government send a letter of apology to each plaintiff, though such letters might some day achieve monetary value as collectors' items, we do not view them as "money damages," the only form of relief provided in the Act. 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b). See Moon v. Takisaki, 501 F.2d 389 (9th Cir. 1974); Frankel v. Heym, 466 F.2d 1226, 1228 (3d Cir. 1972).

We accordingly reverse that part of the judgment ordering that letters of apology be sent.

V

[12] Birnbaum cross-appeals on the ground that the District Court was in error because it denied his request for a jury trial, to which he contends he was entitled under the Seventh Amendment. He argues that the statute, 28 U.S.C. § 2402, which denies a right of jury trial, violates the Constitution because this is a suit at common law within the meaning of the Seventh Amendment.32 "[S]uits against the Government, requiring as they do a legislative waiver of immunity, are not 'suits at common law' within the meaning of the Seventh Amendment. McElrath v. United States, 102 U.S. 426, 439-440, 26 L.Ed. 189." Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 572, 82 S.Ct. 1459, 1484, 8 L.Ed.2d 671 (1962) (plurality opinion of Harlan, J.); see Cargill,

31. In affirming, we are cognizant that the Statute of Limitations has run by now on all unfiled mail opening claims for relief. The last mail opening occurred in 1973, Senate Report at 603-04, and no such program has existed thereafter. The matter was exposed to public knowledge long before the Rockefeller Report was published in June 1975, and even if either the New York statute of one year (CPLR § 215) or of three years (CPLR § 214) should be taken

Inc. v. Commodity Credit Corp., 275 F.2d 745, 748 (2d Cir. 1960) (upholding statute barring jury trial of a counterclaim by the United States).

The judgments on appeal, except for the order to send letters of apology, are affirmed. The denial of the motion for a jury trial is also affirmed.

MOORE, Circuit Judge (concurring in part; dissenting in part):

I concur in Judge Gurfein's opinion both reluctantly and quite dubitante except as to part IV thereof, dealing with damages as to which I dissent. I say "reluctantly" because I cannot distinguish the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. United States District Court, 407 U.S. 297, 92 S.Ct. 2125, 32 L.Ed.2d 752 (1972); I say "dubitante" because but for that decision I might have believed that the opening of Soviet Union-U.S.A. correspondence might well be a "discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal agency" particularly since it matters not "whether or not the discretion be abused".

The CIA is an agency created by Congress to protect our national security in the international field. If the CIA's powers should be expanded or particularized, Congress is always free to so act. In the meantime the courts will continue to be plagued with the necessity of evaluating and balancing the basic values to be resolved, namely, "the duty of Government to protect the domestic security, and the potential danger posed by unreasonable surveillance to individual privacy and free expression". 407 U.S. at 315, 92 S.Ct. at 2135.

As to the amount awarded, even a one dollar sum (presumably the usual six cents to run from discovery with the exercise of due diligence—a most unlikely rule in this type of case—the statute has clearly run.

- 32. The Seventh Amendment provides in pertinent part:
 - In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.

now raised to one dollar because of inflation) would not be justified. The plaintiffs who had written the letters knew their contents. If "mental anguish" resulted from a revelation of their contents, the anguish was of their own creation. If the anguish was in the mind of the recipient, it was not created or enhanced by the government's mail opening. I would, therefore, restrict the damages to one dollar.

Roger M. STOWE, Petitioner-Appellant,

Frank E. DEVOY, United States Marshal, Respondent-Appellee.

No. 273, Docket 78-2085.

United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit.

> Argued Sept. 22, 1978. Decided Nov. 17, 1978.

State prisoner, sought to be extradited to Canada, filed for writ of habeas corpus on ground of alleged double jeopardy, admission of illegal evidence and abuse of discretion by extraditing magistrate. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Jack B. Weinstein, J., denied relief, and petitioner appealed. The Court of Appeals, Moore, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) fact that pending Canadian charges had been considered in sentencing petitioner on unrelated New York charges did not mean that he had been "punished" for the Canadian charges within meaning of double jeopardy clause of extradition treaty, and (2) although petitioner was in United States when his telephone calls were intercepted in Canada by Canadian officials and although Canadian interception may not have passed muster under United States law, the wiretapping evidence was admissible at extradition hearing, especially since interception passed muster under Canadian law and procedures used were not such as to shock the judicial conscience.

Affirmed.

1. Extradition ←2

United States-Canada extradition treaty did not bar extradition of petitioner to Canada merely because in sentencing defendant on unrelated New York charges the pending Canadian charges were taken into consideration.

2. Extradition ←2

That pending Canadian charges were taken into consideration by New York court in imposing sentence on unrelated charges did not mean that defendant had been "punished" for the Canadian charges within meaning of double jeopardy clause of United States-Canada extradition treaty.

See publication Words and Phrases for other judicial constructions and definitions.

3. Extradition ←2

United States-Canada extradition treaty prohibiting extradition when the subject has been "tried and discharged or punished" in the territory of the requested state for the subject offense does not apply unless two distinct requirements are satisfied: (1) fugitive must have been "tried" for the offense in question, and (2) trial must have resulted in discharge or punishment; "discharged" and "punished" are corollaries, each of which modifies "tried."

See publication Words and Phrases for other judicial constructions and definitions.

4. Extradition €=2 ½

To activate double jeopardy clause of United States-Canada extradition treaty the charges on which a fugitive has been "punished" in United States not only must cover the same acts as those which are subject of the extradition request but must also have been the subject of formal charges, on which defendant was "tried," before the "punishing" court.

5. Extra

Alth: tions of Canada n United S investigat which Ca have been received officials, quired to especially der Canad terception notwithsta United Sta ed. U.S.C § 2510 et

6. Crimina

Unless eral statute al jurisdict

7. Telecom

Principute has no a does not de whose teles $ 2510 et se

8. Criminal

Fourth does not apply foreign a ry and in the even if the whom the ecitizens; ration is the deign policy punitive exction by an A Amend. 4;

9. Telecomm

Law of exists and w governs its v cepted phone

Honorable York, sitti

588 E 2d....